Charles D. Hillen, chairman of the Republican national committee, has issued the following:

At this time, when the negroes throughout the United States are celebrating in various ways the fiftieth anniversary of the first proclamation of emancipation and when the Democratic candidate for the presidency. Woodrow Wilson, is appealing to the people of the western states to support him, it is fitting that the chairman of the political committee organized to further the cause of the candidates of the Republican party for president and vice president should call attention to an expression of opinion by Governor Wilson at a period in his career when possibly he never dreamed of being a candidate for a political office.

That expression of opinion was made in his capacity of historian, and it adds to the cumulative testimony that he was until he became a candidate and that he is now un-American in his views of public questions and at heart contemptuous of more than one class of American citizens and out of sympathy with their aims, their purposes and their beliefs.

It was on Sept. 22, 1862, that President Lincoln issued a proclamation giving formal notice that unless the southern states returned to their allegiance to the Union within a hundred days he would declare the slaves within their borders free, and it was on the 1st of January, 1863, following that a definite proclamation of emancipation was issued. Of this crowning event of the career of the immortal Lincoln, Woodrew Wilson says in his "History of the American People," written forty years after-

"The proclamation when it came was no law, but only his (Lincoln's) deliberate declaration of policy for himself and for his party, and changed, as he meant that it should change, the whole air of the struggle and of politics as well."

It is safe to say that not even the most radical unreconstructed southern man would attribute to Lincoln this motive which it remained for the historian Woodrow Wilson alone to discover, that Lincoln abolished slavery to further his own political ambitions and those of his political party. The statement adds proof to much already at hand that Woodrow Wilson forty years after the war was and presumably still is devoid of sympathy for the motive and results of the civil warrin and

The quotation from the Demo craticcandidate's writings proves that he is not a reliable historian nor a fair commentator. It goes to show what has been often asserted, that Governor Wilson is not at heart an admirer of or a believer in American institutions, as his other writings and speeches show that he is not a eulogist of American industries nor a defender of American labor. He continuously slanders millions of adopted citizens from abroad who have become good Americans. He sneers at trade unions, and apparently he would if he could close every American mill and buy in foreign markets, because in the first place he is an aristocrat born and bred and because he wants the American people to buy where they can buy the cheapest.

Everything that can be learned about Governor Wilson from his writings, from his speeches and from his manner of living indicate that he is not the type of man who can successfully appeal for the support of the American
